Course

Iowa State University

Family Interaction Dynamics

Description

An upper-level undergraduate structured seminar at Iowa State University designed to provide undergraduates a theoretical and practical understanding of the interactions of family members over time and across generations. This course is also taught as a graduate seminar alternating spring semesters.

Adolescence

A graduate seminar at Iowa State University which addresses patterns of human growth and developmental change from late childhood through the early adulthood years within a biopsychosocial perspective. Emphasis is placed on policy and practice. This course is taught alternating spring semesters.

Northwestern University

Child and Adolescent Development

An interdisciplinary undergraduate core course, taught in the School of Education and Social Policy at Northwestern University. Patterns of human growth and developmental change from conception until young adulthood are addressed within a psychosocial perspective. Particular emphasis was placed on the relationship between developmental research and policy-making.

The Ohio State University

Family Development

An undergraduate course taught at The Ohio State University designed to provide a theoretical and practical understanding of the social and psychological factors that influence interpersonal relationships within the institution of marriage and the family.

Lifespan Development

An interdisciplinary undergraduate course taught at The Ohio State University, which focused on patterns of human growth and developmental change from conception until death within a psychosocial perspective.

Adolescent Development

An upper-level undergraduate/graduate interdisciplinary course at The Ohio State University, which addressed patterns of human growth and developmental change from late childhood through the early adulthood years within a biopsychosocial perspective.

Families, Schools, and Community Contexts of Adolescence

A newly designed grant-supported upper level undergraduate/graduate service-learning course at The Ohio State University which examined developmental issues faced by adolescents and families in the transition to high school. It includes a technological emphasis together with website development and an applied research focus through parent and adolescent workshops.
